limited public power development, existing alongside private industry, then TVA is probably the ideal form, and it needs to be protected against political trades in the elective congress.

The War Labor Board, on the other hand, represents an arbitrary control over living men, rather than huge fixed investments. The capacity for interference with human rights and personal liberty is vastly greater under WLB than under TVA.

The convention nominated Homer E. Capchart Indianapolis manufacturer, for the long-term seat in the U. S. Senate. Capehart first gained national prominence with his GOP "Cornfield conference" at his Washington (Ind.) farm in 19°3, and generally is regarded as a Dewey supporter. William E. Jenner, of Bedford, an army captain, was nominated for the short term. There was no contest for the guvernatorial nomination which went to Ralph F. Gates, former GOP state chairman.
